WELCOME

Hi.

Start Here

Before we begin, here is exactly what this guide will do for you.

Most beginners don’t fail at affiliate marketing. They get stuck on the very first decision.

Who should I help? What problem should I focus on? What should I promote?

Nobody gives a straight answer. So you read another article, watch another video, bookmark another thread. Weeks pass. The decision never gets made, and the real work never starts.

This guide exists to make that first decision with you. Not someday. In the next hour or two.

What you will have by the end

YOUR STARTING KIT

- One audience you can clearly describe
- One problem that is worth solving
- One offer direction that fits, with a way to check it honestly
- A finished One-Page Offer Map
- Ten content ideas ready to write
- A realistic 7-day plan you can follow with just your phone

What this guide is, and is not

It is a practical starting point. It solves one problem completely: how to choose your person, your problem and your first offer, so you stop guessing.

It is not a get-rich plan, and it does not cover every part of affiliate marketing. Getting attention, writing content that connects, following up and selling are separate skills. We'll point at them near the end, so you know what comes next. But you won't need them to start.

How to use it

- Keep a pen and paper nearby, or use the notes app on your phone.
- Do the short exercises as you go. Reading alone won't give you the result.
- Set aside one to two hours. You can split it across a few days.
- Follow Tunde. He is a made-up beginner who works through each step, so you can see how it looks in real life.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- The first decision is where most beginners get stuck.
- This guide helps you make it, step by step.
- Do the exercises. That is where the value is.

NEXT

The question that decides how everything else will go. Most people never ask it.

CHAPTER

01

The Question Behind Making Money Online

Why more options make the problem worse, not better.

Imagine someone who wants to earn more. They search “make money online” and find hundreds of options: freelancing, trading, dropshipping, content creation, courses, affiliate marketing.

The problem is not a lack of options. It is too many of them. With so many doors, people stand in the hallway and never choose one.

A better question than “Which online business should I start?” is this:

> THE BETTER QUESTION
>
> What can I learn to do that another person already values enough to pay for?

That’s the only legit way those people you admire, and you also, can make money online, and that’s what I will be showing and teaching you in this book: how to get paid for what you can offer. (Bonus: at the end, I will show you how you can get an already made valuable product after you have learnt how to promote and sell, so you don’t go through the stress of creating yours, and do this in less time to start bagging your money online with just this your phone.)

How money actually changes hands

Strip away the apps and the jargon, and every online payment follows the same three steps.

1

SOMEONE HAS A NEED

A problem, a desire, a goal, something they want to change.

2

SOMEONE OFFERS A SOLUTION

A product, a service or a piece of help that fits that need.

3

THE BUYER DECIDES IT IS WORTH IT

They compare the value to the price and say yes.

Notice where the power sits. It sits with the person who has the need. Your job is never to force anyone to pay. It is to understand them well enough to help them find something that genuinely fits.

Where affiliate marketing fits in Creating a solution from scratch is hard. You need to build it, deliver it and support it. Affiliate marketing is interesting for beginners because that part is already done. A company has built a product. You recommend it to people who need it. If someone buys because of your recommendation, the company pays you a commission.

Three roles make it work.

The company	Owns the product. Builds it, sells it, delivers it and supports it.
You, the affiliate	Recommend it to the right people, using your own tracked link.
The buyer	Decides whether it solves their problem and buys it.

Here is how that looks with simple, made-up numbers.

1. Buys through your link
2. Tracks the sale
3. Company pays you

This example is hypothetical. Prices and commission rates vary between programs, and some digital products pay 50% or more. Always read a program's terms before you promote it.

THE SHIFT

Instead of starting with yourself, "What can I sell?", start with the market: "Who needs something, and what solution would genuinely help them?"

DO THIS NOW

Finish this sentence on paper: "I want to help _____ who struggle with _____." Don't worry if it feels rough. We will sharpen it in Chapter 3.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Too many options is the real beginner problem.
- Money moves when someone with a need finds a solution worth paying for.
- Affiliate marketing lets you recommend a solution that already exists.

NEXT

Why choosing a product first is the most common beginner mistake, and what to do instead.

CHAPTER

02

Stop Looking for “What Can I Sell?”

The most common mistake in affiliate marketing, and the simple fix.

Beginners usually pick an offer first. It feels natural. Products are visible. Commissions look exciting. Someone online said a certain program pays well. So they pick it, then go looking for people to buy.

It feels like progress. It rarely works. Here is why.

What goes wrong when you start with the product

Nobody is asking	You post about the product, but your audience never said they had that problem. So nobody reacts.
You blame yourself	Silence feels personal. You think you’re bad at marketing. Often the real issue is that the offer and the audience don’t match.
Content gets harder	You have a product but no person in mind, so every post becomes a guess.
You change direction too often	With nothing solid underneath, you jump to the next “better” offer every week.

The fix: reverse the order

Start with the person. Then the problem. Then the solution.

1. PERSON
   Who are you trying to help? Be specific.
2. PROBLEM
   What is frustrating them, or what do they want that they cannot get right now?
3. SOLUTION
   What would genuinely help? Only now do you look at offers.

Meet Tunde

Tunde is a made-up beginner, but his situation is common. He's a final-year student who wants to earn something before he graduates. Here is how he reverses the order.

Person	Final-year university students who want a useful skill before they graduate.
Problem	They keep switching between skills and never get good at one.

Solution	A beginner-friendly course in one skill, with a clear plan to follow.

Look at what happened. Tunde went from a vague wish ("I want to make money online") to a specific situation. Now he can ask useful questions. What do students in this group ask? What do they get wrong? What would they love someone to explain? Those questions are content ideas.

From vague to specific

Too vague	"I want to help people make money."
Better	"I want to help students."
Specific	"I want to help final-year students who keep switching skills and want to pick one."

Quick check: forwards or backwards?

Read each statement and decide whether it starts from the market or from the product.

A	"This program pays 40%, so I'll promote it." Backwards.

B "My cousin's friends keep complaining they can't find a good tutor. Is there a course that could help?" Forwards.

C "Everyone is promoting this, so it must sell." Backwards.

D "I see the same question in three groups. Let me look for a solution that fits." Forwards.

DO THIS NOW

Take your sentence from Chapter 1. Make it more specific three times. Stop when you can picture one real person who fits it.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Starting with an offer makes everything harder.
- Start with the person, then the problem, then the solution.
- A specific situation gives you something real to create content about.

NEXT

Exactly how to choose your person and your problem, with a simple test so you pick the right one.

03

Start With a Person and a Problem

Two decisions that make every later step easier.

This is the most important chapter in the guide. Choose well here, and the offer, the content and the plan all become simpler.

Step 1: Choose your person

Describe one type of beginner in one sentence. Use this pattern:

> [Stage or situation] who wants [goal].
>
> Example: "Final-year students who want a useful skill before they graduate."

Not sure who to pick? Three easy starting points:

Who you were	Someone at the stage you were at a year or two ago. You already understand their confusion.
Who is around you	Colleagues, classmates, neighbours, family friends. People you can actually talk to.
Who you can reach	A community, group or page you already belong to.

Step 2: Find what frustrates them

Every frustration falls into one of six types. Knowing the type helps you see it.

Confusion	“I don’t know where to start.”
Fear	“What if it’s a scam?”
Time	“I work all day and have no time.”
Money	“I can’t afford to start.”
Skill	“I don’t know how to do this.”
Results	“I tried and nothing happened.”

Where do you find them? Listen. Read the comments under popular posts in your topic. Spend ten minutes in a relevant group. Ask three people you know the same question. Copy their words down exactly. The way people describe their problem is the best content you will ever get.

Step 3: Pick the right problem

You will probably find many problems. Don’t try to solve them all. Run each one through these five checks.

1. REAL
   People actually complain about it, in their own words.

2. SPECIFIC
   You can state it in one clear sentence.

3. SMALL ENOUGH
   One short guide, checklist or video could meaningfully help.

4. HONEST
   You can talk about it truthfully, without exaggerating.

5. WORTH SOLVING
   Fixing it would genuinely matter to the person.

Step 4: Choose a small result

Choose a result you can deliver completely, in a short guide, checklist, video or template. Not “become rich”. Something like “pick one skill to learn first”. Small results build trust faster, because people actually get them.

For this guide, the chosen problem is:

> “I want to start affiliate marketing, but I don’t know who to help, what problem to focus on, or how to choose an offer that makes sense.”

That is narrow enough to solve, and important enough to matter. It is also exactly what you are working through right now.

> A small problem solved completely beats a big problem solved vaguely.

Worksheet

1. MY PERSON (ONE SENTENCE)

2. FRUSTRATIONS I HAVE HEARD (LIST UP TO 10, IN THEIR WORDS)

3. THE ONE I WILL SOLVE FIRST

4. THE SMALL RESULT I CAN DELIVER

Tunde's answer

"Final-year students who keep switching skills. Frustration: confusion about which skill to pick. Small result: choose one skill to focus on for 30 days."

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Your person is one clear sentence.
- Problems come in six types. Listen for the words people use.
- Choose a problem that is real, specific, small, honest and worth solving.

NEXT

How to choose an offer you can recommend with a clear conscience, with a filter you can use again and again.

CHAPTER

04

The Offer-Selection Filter

Choose with your head, not with the commission figure.

An offer is the product or service you recommend. The goal is not the loudest promise or the highest commission. It is a relevant solution for the person and problem you chose.

Where to look

You don’t need a special list. Start with the problem and search for what already helps people with it. Many companies have an affiliate page. Try searching the company’s name followed by “affiliate program”. There are also marketplaces and networks that list programs from many companies. Whichever way you find an offer, run it through the same filter below.

The five filters

1. RELEVANCE
   Does it actually solve the problem I chose?

2. FIT
   Is it appropriate for the beginner I want to help, in level, budget and situation?

3. VALUE
   Can I explain the useful result clearly, without exaggerating?

4. BELIEF
   Would I be comfortable recommending it to someone who trusted my judgment?

5. NEXT STEP
   After someone understands this problem, does the product help with the next part?

Check the fine print

A good offer can still have terms that don't work for you. Before you join any program, find the answers to these.

- [ ] How much is the commission, and how is it calculated?

- ☐ How does tracking work, and how long after a click can a sale still count?
- ☐ When and how do I get paid? Is there a minimum payout?
- ☐ What promotion methods are allowed, and which are banned?
- ☐ What is the refund policy, and what happens to my commission if someone refunds?
- ☐ Who runs the company, and can I easily reach them?

WARNING SIGNS

Step away if you see any of these:

- Promises of guaranteed income, or screenshots with no explanation
- You can't find out who is behind the company
- You're paid mainly for recruiting people, not for selling a real product
- Pressure, fake countdowns or "only 3 spots left"
- Vague product details, no terms, no refund policy
- You wouldn't buy it yourself

The honest part: disclosure

If you earn from a link, tell people. It is the right thing to do. In many places and on many platforms, it is also required. Keep it simple and clear.

> "This is an affiliate link. If you buy through it, I may earn a commission, at no extra cost to you."

Far from hurting sales, honesty builds the trust that makes sales possible.

Score your offer

Give each filter a score from 1 (weak) to 5 (strong). Use pencil. Compare two or three offers.

FILTER	OFFER A	OFFER B	OFFER C
Relevance
Fit
Value
Belief
Next step
TOTAL (out of 25)

One rule: if Relevance or Belief scores below 3, skip the offer, however high the total. No amount of commission makes up for recommending something that doesn't fit or that you don't believe in.

Tunde's result

He compares two beginner courses in one skill. Course A scores 4 on Relevance and Belief, but its terms are unclear. Course B scores a bit lower on Value but has a clear refund policy and a visible team. He picks B, and writes down why.

THE PROBLEM-SOLUTION CYCLE

A useful solution makes the next problem visible. If this guide helps you choose an offer, you may then realise you still need to attract attention, create content and turn interest into sales. Those are separate problems, and each deserves its own solution.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Choose the offer after the person and the problem, never before.
- Use the five filters and check the fine print.
- Disclose clearly. It builds trust.

NEXT

Put everything on one page, so you can see your whole direction at a glance.

CHAPTER

05

The One-Page Offer Map

Your whole direction, on one page.

Before you create a single piece of content, fill out one page. This is your Offer Map. It forces you to be clear. If a line feels vague, you have found the part that needs more thought.

The six lines

My person	Who you are helping. One sentence.
My person wants	The result they are looking for.
Their problem	What is stopping them right now.
My small solution	The free help you will give, such as a guide, checklist or short video.
My recommended offer	The product or training that helps them take the next step.
The next problem	What they will need to solve after your small solution.

Tunde's Offer Map

Here is how Tunde filled his in. The details are made up. The thinking is what matters.

> My person: Final-year students who keep switching skills.
>
> They want: To pick one skill and actually get good at it before graduation.
>
> Their problem: Too many options, no clear path, and no way to tell which skill suits them.
>
> My small solution: A one-page checklist: "How to choose one skill in 3 days."
>
> My recommended offer: A beginner-friendly course in one skill that passed my five filters.
>
> The next problem: How to practise consistently, and how to get the first paid opportunity.

Another example

Here is the same map for someone helping people exactly like you.

Person	A beginner who wants an additional online income stream.

Wants	A legitimate path they can understand and act on.
Problem	Overwhelmed. Doesn't know what to focus on or promote.
Small solution	A simple method for choosing one person, one problem and one relevant offer.
Offer	The affiliate product or training that genuinely helps them take the next step.
Next problem	How to consistently get the right people to notice, trust and act.

Your turn

Replace every line with your own market. The framework is the important part.

MY PERSON

MY PERSON WANTS

THEIR PROBLEM

MY SMALL SOLUTION

MY RECOMMENDED OFFER

THE NEXT PROBLEM

Test your map

- [ ] Can I say my person and their problem in one breath?
- [ ] Would someone in that group read it and think, “That’s me”?
- [ ] Is my offer a natural next step, not a leap?
- [ ] Could I explain every line to a friend, without jargon?

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Your Offer Map shows if your direction is clear.
- If a line is vague, work on that line before moving on.
- You can reuse this map every time you start a new direction.

NEXT

How to turn your map into content, without staring at a blank screen.

CHAPTER

06

Your First Content Direction

You are no longer asking, “What should I post?”

Once you know your person and their problem, content gets easier. You are no longer asking, "What should I post today?" You are answering questions your person already has.

What your content needs to do

Forget going viral. Good beginner content has four simple jobs.

1. GET NOTICED
   Speak to the right person, so they stop scrolling.

2. SHOW YOU UNDERSTAND
   Describe their problem so well that they feel seen.

3. BE USEFUL
   Teach one real thing they can use today.

4. GIVE A NEXT STEP
   Invite them to continue: follow, comment, or get your free resource.

Five starter formats

These five types work for almost any topic. Use them again and again.

Confusion	“I want to make money online. What should I actually learn first?” Answer the question people ask most.
Mistake	“Why choosing an offer before choosing your audience can make content harder.” Show a common error and how to avoid it.
Myth	“You don’t need to create your own product to participate in online selling.” Correct something people believe.
How-to	“How to choose one problem to build your first affiliate content around.” Walk through a small process.
Next step	“You chose the problem. Now here is what you need before people will trust your recommendation.” Bridge to what comes next.

A simple structure for any post

1. HOOK
   One line that names the problem or surprises them.
2. POINT
   The main idea, in plain words.
3. EXAMPLE
   A short, real or clearly hypothetical example.
4. NEXT STEP
   One clear invitation.

A script you can copy

A 30-second text-on-screen video, one idea per screen. No face needed.

Screen 1: You keep switching skills, and you never get good at any.

Screen 2: That's not laziness. It's having too many options and no way to choose.

Screen 3: Pick one skill. Commit to it for 30 days. Judge it after that, not after 3 days.

Screen 4: Want my checklist for choosing one? Comment "CHECKLIST".

Twenty prompts to fill in

Replace the blanks with your person and problem.

1. The biggest mistake beginners make with _____.
2. Why _____ keeps happening, and what to do about it.
3. 3 questions to ask before you _____.
4. _____ vs _____: which fits a beginner?
5. What nobody tells you about _____.
6. If you're stuck on _____, try this one step.
7. A myth about _____ that costs people time.
8. How to _____ using only your phone.
9. One thing I would do first if I were starting _____.

10. Signs that you're doing _____ the hard way.

11. How to tell if _____ is a scam or a real option.

12. What to do when _____ doesn't work.

13. A simple checklist for _____.

14. The question I get most about _____.

15. Stop doing _____. Do this instead.

16. What _____ really costs (and what it doesn't).

17. How long does _____ really take?

18. A beginner's guide to _____ in 60 seconds.

19. You don't need _____ to start _____.

20. What I wish I knew before _____. (Only if it's true for you.)

Make one idea into three

One idea does not have to become one post. Take "why beginners keep switching skills" and make: a short text-on-screen video, a carousel of five points, and a caption that asks a question. Same idea, three formats, no repeating yourself word for word.

A realistic weekly rhythm

3 posts	One confusion or mistake post, one how-to post, one next-step post.
10 minutes a day	Reply to comments and messages. This is where you learn the most.
1 review	Once a week, note which posts got real questions, not just likes.

CONTENT RULE

Teach the part you promised. Curiosity should come from discovering what the next problem is, not from making the current problem harder than it needs to be.

DO THIS NOW

Write five content titles using your Offer Map and any of the five formats. Don’t polish. Just write.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Content answers questions your person already has.
- Use the five formats and the four-part structure.
- Be useful first. Give one clear next step.

NEXT

The problem almost every beginner meets after this one, and why it is not a sign you are failing.

CHAPTER

07

The Part Most Beginners Discover Next

Knowing what to recommend does not create attention.

Suppose you understand the model. You know who you want to help. You know the problem. You have a relevant offer.

Then comes the uncomfortable question.

> How do I get the right people to actually see this?

That is a different problem. Knowing what to recommend does not automatically create attention. Attention has to be earned. Then interest has to become trust. Then trust has to become a decision.

1 ATTENTION
The right person notices you.

2 INTEREST
They want to know more about the problem and the solution.

3 TRUST
They believe you are honest and know what you are talking about.

4 DECISION
They decide, freely, whether this is right for them.

The next six problems

Each of these is a real skill. Beginners meet them in roughly this order. Knowing them in advance means you will not be surprised, or think something is wrong with you.

Problem 1	How do I consistently get the right people to notice me?
Problem 2	How do I create content regularly without running out of ideas or energy?

Problem 3	How do I turn interested viewers into leads I can speak to again?
Problem 4	How do I follow up without being pushy or forgettable?
Problem 5	How do I answer objections and make an offer honestly?
Problem 6	How do I improve from results, and save time with simple systems?

What you can do with this guide alone

Here is the honest picture. You can start with what you have now. Choose your person, solve one small problem, publish useful content, and learn from how people respond. That alone gives you weeks of useful work, and real feedback.

As you do, you will meet the six problems above one at a time. When you do, you will know what they are called, and what to look for.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Choosing an offer does not create attention.
- Attention, trust and decision are separate stages.
- The next problems are normal. They are a sign you are moving forward.

NEXT

Your plan for the next seven days, with exactly what to do and when you are done.

CHAPTER

08

Your 7-Day Action Plan

A week to move from vague intention to a real, testable path.

This plan is built for a beginner with a smartphone and 30 to 60 minutes a day. By the end of seven days you will have a clear, tested direction and real feedback from real people. Sales grow from there, as you keep implementing and stay consistent.

DAY 1

Choose your person

Write one sentence describing who they are and what they want. Use the pattern from Chapter 3. Done when: you can read it aloud and picture a real person.

DAY 2

List the problems

Write 10 problems or frustrations they have, in their words. Circle the one you could solve completely in a small resource. Done when: one problem is circled.

DAY 3

Find and filter offers

Find two or three possible offers. Score each with the five filters and check the fine print. Done when: you have picked one, or none (that is a fine result).

DAY 4

Write your Offer Map

Fill in all six lines. Remove anything vague. Done when: the map passes the four test questions.

DAY 5

Create your small resource

Make a one-page checklist or short guide that solves the small problem. See the blueprint on the next page. Done when: you can send it to a friend and they can use it.

DAY 6

Turn it into content ideas

Write 5 to 10 short content ideas that answer real questions around the same problem, using the five formats. Done when: you have at least five titles.

DAY 7

Publish and invite

Publish your first useful piece. Give people a clear way to get your resource, such as commenting a keyword or messaging you. Done when: it's live and you have replied to every comment.

Day 5 blueprint: your small resource

A small resource is a short, genuinely useful piece of help you give for free. It is how people get to know you, and how you invite them to a next step. Keep it to one page or one short document.

Title	Promise one clear result: “How to choose one skill to learn in 3 days.”
The problem	Two sentences that show you understand it.
3 to 5 steps	Simple actions anyone can follow.
One example	A made-up or real example (clearly labelled).
Next step	One honest invitation to continue, with disclosure if you earn from it.

Send it as a PDF, a note, or a Google Doc link. Whatever is easiest for your person to open on their phone.

Your checklist

- ☐ One sentence describing my person
- ☐ A list of 10 problems, one circled
- ☐ Two or three offers scored with the five filters
- ☐ A finished One-Page Offer Map
- ☐ My small resource created
- ☐ At least five content ideas written
- ☐ My first piece published, with a clear next step
- ☐ Every comment and message answered

> IF YOU FALL BEHIND
>
> That's normal. Don't restart. Pick up on the next day and keep going. A plan done in ten days is better than a perfect plan never finished.

After day seven

Review what happened. Which post got real questions? What did people ask? What confused them? Keep what worked and change one thing. Then repeat for two or three weeks before you judge anything. One post, or one week, does not decide your future.

DO THIS NOW

Open your calendar and block 30 to 60 minutes tomorrow for Day 1. A plan without a time is just a wish.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Seven days is for implementation. Results grow as you stay consistent.
- Each day has a finish line. Use it.
- Review weekly, change one thing, repeat.

NEXT

Where you stand now, and the one idea to carry forward.

CHAPTER

09

Your Next Move

You now have the first piece of the puzzle.

You now have the first piece of the puzzle:

> PERSON → PROBLEM → OFFER

But making money online is not solved by knowing a model. It is solved by becoming useful at the activities that make the model work.

If affiliate marketing is your chosen path, those deeper skills include understanding your audience, creating content that earns attention, generating engaged leads, communicating value, following up, and improving your selling process. You met them in the last chapters. You will learn them one at a time.

The four questions

This guide has done its job if you can answer these:

1. Who am I trying to help?
2. What problem am I helping them solve?
3. What relevant solution can I recommend?
4. What problem will I need to solve next?

If you can answer all four, you are further ahead than most people who have been “thinking about” affiliate marketing for months.

What to keep in mind

- Start before it feels perfect. A small, real test teaches more than another week of planning.
- Be honest in everything you recommend. Trust is the one asset you can’t buy.
- Expect some posts to flop. It’s information, not a verdict.
- Keep a notebook of the questions people ask. It will never run out of ideas.
- Learn the next skill when you meet its problem. Not before.

Bonus: how to get a ready-made product to promote

You don't have to create a product. Here is how to find one that already exists, and get your own link.

1. START FROM YOUR MAP
   You already know your person and their problem. Search for what already helps them.

2. FIND THE AFFILIATE PAGE
   Search the company's name plus "affiliate program". Many companies list their terms openly.

3. CHECK THE TERMS
   Commission, tracking, payout, rules and refunds. Use the checklist from Chapter 4.

4. JOIN AND GET YOUR LINK
   Apply to the program. Once approved, you receive your own tracked link.

5. TRY IT YOURSELF
   Use the product, or study it closely, so you can explain it honestly.

Then promote it the way you have learned: person, problem, helpful content, and an honest recommendation with a clear disclosure.

THE FINAL IDEA

You don’t need to know everything before you begin.

You need to know the next problem worth solving, and become good enough at solving it to create real value for the person on the other side.

Quick Answers and Glossary

Short answers to the questions every beginner asks.

Quick answers

Do I need money to start?

Not necessarily. You can start with a phone, data and time. Some tools or products cost money, but you don't need to buy anything to do the work in this guide.

Do I need to show my face?

No. Many beginners start with text, voice or text-on-screen content. What matters is that you are clear and useful.

Do I need a big following?

No. A small number of the right people who trust you matters more than a big number of random viewers.

How long until I earn?

It depends mostly on how well you implement and how long you stay with it. Give yourself weeks of learning and testing before you judge your results, and keep going.

Can I promote more than one offer?

Later, yes. At the start, focus on one person, one problem and one offer. It makes learning faster.

Is affiliate marketing a scam?

The model itself is a legitimate, widely used way for companies to pay for results. But scams exist around it, so use the warning signs in Chapter 4.

What if my first posts get no views?

That is common and not a verdict on you. Review, change one thing, and keep going.

Must I tell people I earn commission?

Yes. It is honest and often required. Use a clear disclosure line, and check any rules for your country and platform.
